Easter Eggs! Yes, Please!

With Easter just weeks away the shops are full of yummy chocolates and hot cross buns. Looking after your teeth doesn't necessarily mean denying yourself of all these delicious foods. Sugar and sticky starchy foods will not cause your teeth to decay unless they are left on your teeth for a length of time.

Dr Sam tells his patients to enjoy all the scrumptious foods but remember to brush and floss your teeth properly afterwards, or at the very least have a drink of water. Try to avoid grazing on snacks. If we can limit the time the food particles sit on our teeth then the amount of bacteria in our mouth will be less and so will the decay.

Caring for Children's Teeth

Baby teeth are made of a softer material than adult teeth, therefore they are more prone to decay. It is recommended that parents help their children brush their teeth up until about the age of eight, or when they are capable of tying their own shoe laces, until then children are simply not dexterous enough to manage themselves.

Even though baby teeth will eventually all fall out, it is important that we take good care of them. If children lose their baby teeth before they would naturally fall out then they risk having crowding issues with their adult teeth.
